Baldrige Killed in Fall Before Rodeo Event

By David Johnston WASHINGTON — Comm Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, who gained prominence in the Reagan administration for his leadership on trade issues, died Saturday after a riding accident in California.

Mr. Baldrige, 64, died in surgery after a horse he was riding while practicing for a rodeo performance reared up and fell on him in Walnut Creek, California.

He was a man of sharp contrast: whose accomplishments included championship calf roping. A member of the Council on Foreign Relations, he was also a member of the Rodeo Cowboys Association.

He graduated from Yale University in 1944 after writing a thesis on Chancer, then spent two years as an ironworker, pouring molten iron into molds for the Cleveland plant of the Eastern Malleable Iron Co. Thirteen years later, he became Reagan's original cabinet, Mr. Baldrige presided over one of the lesser known departments of the federal government. But as the administration worked to develop a more comprehensive and aggressive trade policy, he gained international attention as a pragmatic defender of U.S. trade interests.

Mr. Baldrige, who insisted he was a free-trade advocate, was the driving force behind the cabinet's decision in April to impose sanc-tions against Japanese electronics drige's independent spirit and his companies in a dispute over computer chips. Main Tamil Rebel Group Balks at Peace Proposals

Crimean Tatars in Red Square during a protest demanding a return to their homeland.

NEW DELHI — Indian negotia-tors have failed to persuade Sri Lanka's main Tamil rebel group to accept peace proposals after two days of talks here, the Press Trust of India reported Sunday.

The news agency quoted Velupil-tei Prabhakeran, leader of the Libcration Tigers of Tamil Eclam, as saying prospects were dim for signing the pact on Wednesday as proposed by Sri Lanka.

Mr. Prabhakeran said the proposals, backed by the Sri Lankan and Indian governments, were un-satisfactory and would have to be improved. Sri Lankan officials said Friday they had agreed with India on the outline of a peace accord to end the four-year insurgency by the Tamils, and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was said to be preparing to meet Monday with the top Tamil rebel leader to encourage him to accept President Junius R. Jayawardene of Sri Lanka announced Saturday that Mr. Gandhi would fly to Colombo on Wednesday to sign the agreement, which would be implemented Aug. 3. Mr. Gandhi would not confirm any such plans.

Sri Lanka experts also cautioned that, despite Mr. Jayawardene's optimism, he faces a difficult task selling the proposed accord to his country's majority Sinhalese population. On Saturday, he threatened Tamil separatist leaders were set to dissolve Parliament if it did not approve the peace plan.

The plan would meet a central Tamil demand by linking the mainly Tamil Northern Province with the Eastern Province, which is slightly more than 33 percent Tamil. The regions would share a provincial assembly and chief minister, and Tamil would be recognized as a national language.

WARSAW — Poland's Roman Catholic Church has won a significant concession from the Communist authorities, gaining approval for a $10 million program, funded by the United States, to help private-sector agriculture here.

The government of General Wojciech Jaruzelski has granted a tax exemption and customs clearance for a church committee to import millions of dollars worth of badly needed farm machinery and water-pumping equipment, a committee official said.

The government's action this month reversed a position maintained during five years of previous negotiations with the church.

Funds for the imports will come from a $10 million U.S. donation. The funds were appropriated by Congress several years ago but never used by the church because of its mability to obtain the tax and customs waivers. A bill now pending in Congress would extend the appropriation into the next fiscal year, beginning in October.

According to church officials, se nior Polish officials also have indicated they could now permit the establishment of a nonprofit foundation that would institutionalize the aid program and seek to perpetuate it with additional foreign donations as well as business activities inside Poland.

As currently planned, the project will start by providing farmers with the opportunity to buy machinery normally unavailable in Poland The church then would use the money from the sales to finance water and sewage projects in rural

WASHINGTON (AP) - Caspar W. Weinberger, the secretary of defense, said Sunday that the United States will not bargain away U.S. controlled nuclear warheads in West Germany in seeking an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union.

Interviewed on television, Mr. Weinberger said he regards the latest arms control offer by the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, as a significant step toward a possible agreement, but he is still waiting to see all of the conditions. He said that for the United States to agree to withdraw those warheads would violate a principle that the superpowers will not bargain away agreements they have made with other countries.

"It not only violates that, but the German Pershings are not on the table," he said, alluding to nuclear warheads for West Germany's 72 Pershing IA short-range missiles. He added the Soviet proposal would simplify the problem of how to verify a treaty, which the United States regards as a key point in negotiations.

In Memory of My Brother MOHAMMAD REZA PAHLAVI The Late Shahanshah of Iran

July 27, 1987 marks the 7th anniversary of the passing of my beloved brother Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the late Shahanshah of Iran. He dedicated his life to his people. He lived and died for Iran.

He conceived of Iran as a transcendant idea, expressing the inevitable ebb and flow of history, at times reaching the heights of human achievement, at times losing grasp of the ideal, but always striving, always seeking to achieve - an eternal fire that time and chance might dim, but never extinguish. He saw Iran as a main pillar of human civilization, a nation whose heritage of justice, beauty and light had enriched human culture through the ages. He believed his people deserved a future that was promised in this heritage and, as their king and leader, he strove with them to achieve it. He rejoiced in his people's steady march toward plenty, equality and freedom. He was a nationalist and a proud Iranian.

He was a man of religion. Not the religion of those who peddle the name of God for profit and power. Nor of those who worship at the altar of hate, war and vengeance. He believed in God's eternal goodness, bountiful mercy and encompassing benevolence. He admonished those who forgot God's dominion over man's conscience; he abhorred false pretenders who dragged His sublime name into the gutter of mundane politics to support their own lust for worldly power and possession. He was a true Moslem.

He strove to eradicate poverty, hunger, ignorance and disease in his country and beyond. He worked for peace in his region and in the world. In the 37 years of his reign, Iran was a force for calm and stability in a turbulent region fraught with rebellion, war and fratricide. In world politics, he preached friendship among nations and counseled peace through strength and good will through understanding. He was a wise and trustworthy leader.

He believed that people everywhere were children of the same God and shared in the same eternal spark. He loved his family, cared for his friends and honored his people. He bore malice toward no one. He forgave every single individual who had wished his person ill and done his person wrong. He was a good man. Were he alive today, he would rage against the atrocities that are daily committed by an oppressor regime in the name of his people. He would also condemn those who unjustly attribute the oppressor's barbarism to the oppressed, and thus fall to honor the aspirations of a nation that is justly proud of its past, and painfully conscious of the burden it carries for the future. To iranians he would say: Be strong. Do not lose hope. Look into your souls. You will know that your future is in your own hands. Only you can cast off the ugliness that now engulfs you. Only you can recapture the glory and the respect that is rightfully yours. Unite and smite the oppressor

God bless his soul.

Lawmakers Still Expect Battle Over Contra Aid

By Linda Greenhouse New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Leading members of Congress, including Republicans who favor U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, say they do not share the Reagan stration's view that the Irancontra hearings have improved the outlook for continued aid.

Democrats and Republicans in Congress both said in interviews that they expected the rise in public support after Licutenant Colonel Oliver L. North's testimony to be of little lasting value to the White House. They said the debate in Congress after the current $100 million appropriation runs out in September would be contentious, with the outcome in doubt.

President Ronald Reagan is expected to ask Congress soon for an 18-month appropriation of $130 million to $140 million, which would carry the aid program for the rebels, known as contras, through the end of his term.

After the first disclosures about the secret diversion to the rebels of profits from the Iran arms sales, Reagan administration officials were so pessimistic about the chances for more aid that they put off submitting the request until fall.

Officials had said they feared that disclosures from the Iran-contra hearings could make the outcome just as doubtful. But the hearings have instead served as a highly visible platform for government officials and others to present the case for contra aid. Mr. Reagan says the hearings have turned the tide. "The American people are waking up," he said Friday.

But polls showing modest in-creases in public support for aid to the contras were generally discounted in Congress.

A New York Times-CBS News Poll taken on Tuesday and Wednesday showed 49 percent of the public opposed to aiding the contras, with 40 percent in favor. In January, the same poll found 60 percent opposed and 28 percent in favor.

Public support has "maybe gone up a little, but it's still going to be tough," said Senator Bob Dole of Kansas, the Republican leader, who has supported aid. "You've got to have the votes."

Senator Richard G. Lugar, Republican of Indiana, said the hearings had given the contra policy increased visibility without increase.

Bring Back the Blimp? Some Navies Consider It increased visibility without increasing public confidence. He said he believed the administration did not realize how thin its support was in the Senate even last fall, when the $100 million appropriation was approved 53-47. Only a bipartisan agreement on a simultaneous vote on sanctions against South Africa saved the contra bill from a filibuster that could have killed it, he recalled.

The House has also been deeply divided. It initially rejected the $100 million appropriation last year, then approved it 221-209. In March, it voted 230-196 to block further aid to the contras until the administration provided an accounting of the funds spent so far.

While that measure never came to a vote in the Senate, the House Democratic leadership regards the vote as having placed a solid majority of the House on record against the administration's policy.

"We're not sensing any loss" of opposition as a result of the hearings, said Representative David E. Bonior of Michigan, who heads a House leadership task force on the

More Adults Believe Paddling Of School Pupils Is Child Abuse

Corporal punishment of public school pupils, which is legal in 41 of the 50 states, is increasingly opposed by parents, lawmakers, psychologists and educators who say it can be a form of child abuse, The New York Times

The punishment usually involves striking pupils across the posterior, most often with a paddle, or with a beavy belt or a birch switch. Marilyn B. Gootman, a professor of educa-tion at the University of Georgia, said it has little deterrent effect because "the kids who get paddled are the same ones who get pad-dled over and over again."

She said paddling also can have a negative effect on children whose behavior never leads to corporal punishment: "Good' children also worry about getting paddled. Their worrying saps energy from their thinking and learning."

Support for corporal punishment is strongest in the rural South and in the Midwest. "I don't know what we'd do without it," said Johnnie Sikes, the school superintendent in Toombs County, Georgia. "The only alternative is to send unruly kids home, and they won't learn anything there."

Irwin A. Hyman, a psychologist at Temple University who heads the National Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment, said paddling contributes to "the acceptance of the idea that violence against children is all Western diplomats say they believe the Cuban campaign was created to counter the embarrassment of the defection in late May of a Cuban Air Force brigadier general. The dredging boat, operated by 60 members of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, was expected to make the river passable for commercial vessels by early this week.

Working like a giant vacuum cleaner, the diesel-powered dredge sucks the packed dirt and sand through pipes and spits out the sediment at a disposal site on shore.

The sandbar stretches about 1,000 yards (912 meters) across the river. It was caused by a lack of rainfall, which has decreased the water depths in some spots from 10 feet (three meters) to seven feet, and by the unpredictably changing currents of the winding river.

The sand blockage, or shoal, was discovered on Sunday a week ago by the startled crew of a towboat that smacked bottom on its way from St. Paul to New Orleans.

The Tower commission painted just such a picture and went on to fault his high subordinates as well for failing to take up the slack.
The commission found no "smoking gun" or conclusive evidence that Mr. Reagan was aware of aid being sent to the Nicaraguan rebels in violation of the law, or of the diversion of funds from selling arms to Iran.

The congressional investigating commit-tees resumed the search for this evidence. But what they have found has not been a smoking gun but a smoking cannon. This cannon shows just how personally and firmly Mr. Reagan set the course the United States followed: He insisted on supporting the Nicaraguan rebels, though Congress banned it. He insisted on selling arms to Iran in return for the release of American hostages, though he had wisely vowed never to bargain with terrorists. Whatever else remains to be discovered, this cannon represents not evidence of a crime but of his leadership, confused and flawed and determined.

Domestic and foreign policies essentially have marched where President Reagan wanted them to go for six years. That powerful fact often seems forgotten in light of the current policy disaster. It is also indisputable that he commanded extraordinary loyalty from his subordinates. Even now they speak of him with respect. Neither Mr. Shultz, Rear Admiral John Poindexter, the former national security adviser, or Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North, his aide, has uttered one had ously that they could only say yes, yes. William Casey, the former director of central intelligence, played perhaps a still more decisive role. Before his death this year, he could guide the imaginative colonel and the bureaucratic admiral through the alleys of clandestine operations. When necessary, it seems, Mr. Casey was not above creating intelligence information to fit the policy. Mr. Shultz testified, for example, that contrary to the facts, the CIA told the president at a crucial juncture that Iran had essened its terrorist activities.

The director, the admiral, the colonel and others set off a bombardment of lies and deceptions, touching Congress, their col-leagues in the executive branch, the president and even one another. Their conflicting testimonies and destruction of evidence make it impossible to reconstruct events with confidence. But the president has never condenned them outright for these actions.

Would accurate information have altered the president's course? Mr. Shultz told of an early White House meeting to discuss the Iran initiative. He and Mr. Weinberger opposed the fantastic scheme. According to Mr. Shultz, the president responded that "the American people will never forgive me if I fail to get these hostages out."

Mr. Reagan left no doubt about his goals: He demanded action to free the hostages and support the contras. Whether or not he knew the details, his aides followed his lead and did the rest.

Go Calmly in the Gulf

Despite the mine damage to the tanker Bridgeton and the ululations from Tehran, Washington does not have to turn injury into disaster. By refraining from retaliatory action, the administration can ensure that the avatollahs are not diverted from contemplating their present predicament and the desirability of a cease-fire. Nor should one mine give decisive weight to panicky calls to quit the Gulf.

American specialists, with Sandi and Kuwaiti help, tried to clear mines from the shipping channels before the arrival of the Kuwaiti tankers carrying new American flags. The effort was evidently incomplete, and the navy seems to have misjudged the threat. The "invisible hands" that Iran's prime minister. Mir Hussein Moussavi, claims planted the mine clearly have Iranian fingerprints. Damage to the tanker appears slight and unworthy of response.

The important fact in the Gulf is not the mining, a hazard from which a Soviet tanker has already suffered, but Iraq's apparent cessation of attacks against vessels bound to and from Iran. It is in Iran's interest to freely export its oil, whereas Irag's flows via pipelines through Saudi Arabia and Turkey. Iran, of course, may use the respite to buy arms and prepare for next season's land war. But there are other possibilities.

Mideast Peace Talks: Prescription for War?

By Moshe Arens

The writer, a former defense minister of Israel, is now a minister vithout portfolio. He is a member of the Likud Party.

ERUSALEM --- An international conference on the Middle East with Soviet participation, widely touted as the only avenue to peace between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians, is an ill-conceived idea. It cannot provide the proper frame-work and the pressure-free atmosphere needed to resolve what is not merely a question of territory and borders but of Israel's very existence. It can only severely harm Is-rael and increase Soviet power and prestige in the Middle East. Until recently, there was a consen-

Israel would come under enormous pressure in an international conference to yield to demands that threaten its existence.

sus in Israel and the United States that the only desirable format for peace negotiations was direct talks between the parties to the conflict. It is not only a reasonable, unimpeachable position but one of particular pertinence in the context of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Direct talks, implying recognition, would remove a main obstacle to peace: Arab refusal to recognize Israel's right to exist. The principle proved itself in the case of Egypt.

Now we are told that Jordan weaker, smaller and more vulnerable to Palestinian and radical threats needs the protection of an international umbrella to enter such talks, and has therefore conditioned its participation on Israel's acquiescence to an international conference, a format first proposed - lest we forget - by the Soviet Union and the Palestine Liberation Organization

But no matter what promises Jordan has made privately to America and Israel, to suppose that a country that dares not dely radical regimes and Palestiman terrorists on matters of procedure will defy them on matters of

It is even more absurd to contend that the Soviet Union, begetter of the international conference idea, would consent to accept a purely ceremonial role and serve as a rubber stamp to decisions made by the parties to the dispute. On the contrary, it would insist on playing an active role—and would not be alone in doing so. Every putative participant, including Amerca, has declared that it would present ts own ideas for a solution.

They all eschew an "imposed" settlement — 2 rather empty concession, since no such imposition can be forced on Israel at present - but they all assume that conference pressure exerted on Israel to withdraw to the 1949 armistice line would prove irresistible, despite the official opposition to such withdrawal by all of Israel's major political parties.

It is not a baseless assumption.

Israel would be isolated at such a conference. The unanimity among participants for virtually total Israeli withdrawal would be complete. The only difference between the American and Soviet positions is on whether Judea and Samaria should become an independent PLO state or a "Palestinian homeland" federated with Jordan — an ultimately meaningless difference, since there is no way to control who would rule the area once

Israel relinquished control. But there is a world of difference et Union. The United States has kept on good terms with both sides. In the 1970s, it successfully concluded interim agreements between Israel and Egypt, Israel and Syria and, of course, the Israel-Egypt peace treaty.

The Soviet Union has refused to restore diplomatic relations with Israel, which it severed 20 years ago; it supports terrorist organizations, arms radical Libya and Syria to the teeth, regularly votes to expel Israel from the United Nations and, in violation of international agreements. prevents free Jewish emigration.

It recently sponsored reunification of the PLO on a platform calling for continued terrorism and the disman-tling of Israel. And now, having secured Israel's agreement to a Soviet consular mission in Tel Aviv, it refuses to reciprocate by allowing a similar Israeli delegation into the Soviet Union. Clearly, the Soviet Union's changes in style have brought no concomitant changes in substance in its Middle East policies.

Advocates of the international conference assure us that a condition for Soviet participation would be full Soviet restoration of diplomatic relations with Israel and free Jewish emigration. But once the wheels of the international conference started turning would the world - and Israbetween America's right to a role of el - possess the perseverance to wait "honest broker" and that of the Sovi- until the Soviet ambassador presented his credentials in Jerusalem? Until 400,000 Jews were granted exit visas? Until a flow of 50,000 emigrants a year was established?

If not, Soviet leverage at the conference would be unmatchable: By linking Jewish emigration and diplomatic relations to Israeli concessions at the talk, Moscow would make Israel's position untenable.

We are assured that if the major powers insisted on interfering in bi-lateral Israel-Jordan negotiations, israel would be free to walk out. But it is inconceivable that Israel could, with impunity, bolt a conference it has so adamantly pushed for. The momentum of worldwide expectations, the universal hope for a breakthrough and the pressure of public opinion generated by such a conference could not be cavalierly dismissed: If Israel walked out, it would be branded a rejector of peace.

The rush to an international conference is a classic example of the erosion of will in a democracy in the face of external pressures and prom-ises, and internal impatience and fa-tigue. What Israelis who pursue it want is massive international pressure to cover their own acquiescence in a solution they previously deemed life-threatening. It is a solution most Israelis consider not a formula for peace but a prescription for war.

M OSCOW - "Henry, you are trying to shut us out of the Middle East, Andrei Gromyko said to Henry Kissinger as the short fived Genera peace conference of December 1973 convened

Well, Andrei, there will now be a hiatus." Mr. Kissinger responded with uncharacteristic understatement. He incharacteristic understatement. He and Anwar Sadat of Egypt their set about accomplishing the exclusion that Mr. Grontyko accurately feared.

The hiatus, which lasted nearly 14 years, is now ending as the Russians forge their way into the Middle East in a big way. Mikhail Gorbachev's diolomatic operatives have made the Middie East the focal point of the hew thinking that Mr. Gorbachev has de-manded in Soviet foreign policy.

Fluidity and tactical admittess have become the hallmarks of the new-thinking diplomatic style as the Soviets move away from the stolid: master designs and stifling ideological commitments of the Grounds era Instead of concentrating their efforts on "fraternal" but marginalforces, they focus on each region's most important countries and actively compete to influence them.

While glasnost and "restructuring" remain vague concepts, "new thinking" is winning Mr. Gurbachev praise; and support in Moscow and helping him consolidate his rule.

In the Middle East, new thinking has involved sending consular officials to Israel as a tiny step toward resum. ing diplomatic relations, coordinating oil production levels with Saudi Arabia, writing off Egypt's military debt at a time when debt is a major arriant. between Cairo and Washington, and chartering Soviet tankers to Kuwait while Washington hesitated.

Syria, Libya and the Palestine Liberation Organization, once privileged clients, are more likely to be objects of Soviet pressure than Soviet largess today, Mr. Gorbachev's Middle East experts hope to crown their efforts by getting Syria and the Palestinians to attend and cooperate in an Arab summit meeting that King Fahd hopes to host in Saudi Arabia this year.

The seductive theme of Soviet prag matism is playing elsewhere, too. Sovi et overnires to Japan and to the economically powerful members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations reassure a Soviet populace weary. of tossing rubles into the bottomless pit of Vietnam. In Latin America, Mexico is now more important in Soviet calculations than Cuba or Nicaragna.

Washington is responding to this new challenge with what looks suspiciously like old thinking. In the Gulf.

Soviet political gains are met with a loudly trumpeted but unconvincing U.S. military response, and a returnto Kissingerian language about excluding the Russians from the region.

The idea of a ceremonial Middle East peace conference that would for active Amend mediation has also been revived by Washington. There seems to be an assumption there that the Russians will once again settle for the appearance of diplomatic parity with the United States and stand aside at a moment decided by Washington. That is almost certainly not the case. Mr. Gorbachev is apparently free of the complexes about parity with the United States that his predecessors possessed, and will hold out for a conference in which the Soviets will have a substantive role.

In 1973, President Sudat had already pushed the Russians to the side of Middle East diplomacy. Mr. Kissinger could afford to let them a tiny. way back in at the Geneva conterence, and then excise them again. When he talked of excluding the Russians, Mr. Kissinger had specific steps in mind to achieve his goal.

The Reagan administration does not. The Soviets have patiently built up a position in the Middle East and the Gulf that no longer depends on U.S. tolerance. More active in both Iran and Iraq than Washington can be, emphasizing common interest with conservative Arab states and Israel, Moscow has created a Soviet role that Americans must come to terms with

The Soviets are demonstrating that they have absorbed the lessons of Mr. Kissinger's successful Middle East diplomacy of the 1970s better than his... successors in Washington. While Mr. Kissinger is denied a policy-making role in a Republican administration the man who observed him so closely as Soviet ambassador to V/ashington. Anatoli Dobrynin, sits at Mr. Gorba chev's right hand, fashioning a skillful Soviet Kissingerian policy. As the amateur diplomacy of the Iran-contra affair has proved, such discontinuity is a flaw in the Ameri--can system that the Soviets not only recognize but have learned to exploit. The Washington Post.

How Brezhnev Offered to 'Split the World' With Nixon

B EFORE President Nixon began his negotiations with Moscow, he had been thoroughly briefed by his White House experts, who reinforced his view that the Soviets respected power and understood military strength best. They could not comprehend restraint, which perplexed them, and allowed them to conclude there was room for them to advance their interests.

In May 1972, he had the first of three summit meetings with Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet chief. He was clearly excited by this first supersummit, especially by the fact that he was the first American president to be received at the Kremlin.

The summit dialogues were marked by an ambience of friendship. Mr. Brezhnev talked bluntly but his tone bespoke cordiality. The first Brezhnev-Nixon summit not only laid the basis for an improved personal relation-ship between the two heads of state, it produced the accord on strategic arms limitation and the both superpowers of a permanent concept of deterrence through "mutual terror." Mr. Nixon confided his impressions to his diary: "Anybody who gets to the top of the Communist hierarchy and stays at the top has to have a may not be as elegant, and his manners not as fine, as that of some of his sophisticated European and sian colleagues, but like an American-born leadthis one they went over and over it again.

States: Its talk about democracy and the rule of law is simply a cover for anticommunist, interventionist aggression. For the pragmatic center it is a new chapter in the process inaugurated by the Vietnam War and furthered by Watergate, whereby the icons of American mythology - accountability, the rule of law, congressional oversight — have been progressively crumbling. For the pro-American right, it has made life exceedingly uncomfortable.

Many Latin Americans remember when anti-communism was a noble end that justified all means imaginable - and some that were unimaginable. The time was the 1960s and '70s; the places were Chile, Brazil. Argentina, Uruguay. Central America. Now, instead of an Argentine or Chilean general proudly justifying the "dirty war" against "subversion," we hear senior Reagan adminis-tration officials unabashedly saying that they lied, misled Congress and kept the president in the dark about illegal acts, all in the name of the struggle against "communism in our hemisphere." And they are applanded for it.

the finale that it was impossible to hear the music that accompanied the showing.

With the collection, Lacroix paid homage to the Camargue region of southern France and his native city of Arles.

The backdrop for the show featured a poetic re-creation of the Camargue marshlands. Amid that design, Lacroix brought onstage three young women who were presented as the queen of Aries and her two attendants. (In the local pageant, the queen of Arles is chosen not on the basis of her beauty, but as a member of an old and distinguished family.)

In what quickly emerged as the newest and most important fashion silhouette, all three of the young women wore antique Arlesienn dresses in pastel satins, with crisscrossed shawl collars of old lace. Their hair was heavily coiffed.

But Lacroix handled his Aries. motif with wit and a light hand. The silhouette was very short, youthful, exciting and sassy, but without a trace of vulgarity. Part of the appeal was an underlying seductiveness that suggested a love of Several of his themes that were introduced in the show are bound to be heavily copied. One was that of the sophisticated Parisienne, icaturing the use of black trimmed with black braid and black fringe. Another was the silhouette of a er theme also is feeling of bulk. His now-famous sense of humor was another saving grace. On the back of a black coat, he attached a

Although Lacroix has switched from strong colors to subdued ones, he also produced purple, red and green as a counterpoint. A hot-pink coat with yellow lining, which resembled a bullfighter's cape, was a knock-out.

Despite the frivolousness of this collection, there was a serious, religious overtone as the models wore big gold crosses on black ribbon, and demure, pushed-up chignons circled by black satin.

High points included a short mink coat with honey-colored satin sleeves; quilted suits made of Provencal cotton; a short, black-lace Marie Antoinette-inspired dress; and a three-color satin dress, finished with a witty pink satin bow in the back. Details included black velvet chenille braid, with which Lacroix circled a white short coat. The same chenille, but in hot pink and red, also appeared on a long moire skirt under a lavishly embroidered bull-fighter's bolero. Jewelry was made of gold-painted clay and included drop earrings shaped as hearts.

Except for one really mad hat -two doves sitting on their nest atop a black velvet platter hat - Lacroix was quieter in this department than usual.

At the second showing, lost between Paloma Picasso and Pierre Berge - Yves Saint Laurent's business partner who sponsored Lacroix's entrance to the Chambre Syndicale - was Lacroix's mother, who was seeing his collection for the first time. She seemed totally unimpressed by all the commotion.

Asked how she felt about her son, she said: "As usual, I think he has a lot of talent but that he's still very simple." Impressed? "You know," she said, shrugging her shoulders, "I'm from Arles." As for the nice but simple beige poplin suit she was wearing "No," she said, "my son did not design it. Will I dress with him now? Maybe Why not since he has his own

If the mine incident last week leads to discovery of a new mine field in the open waters of the Gulf, they will have to be cleared or mapped, which could take many days. The U.S. military faces extreme difficulties, but not insurnountable obstacles, Pentagon officials said.

The U.S. Navy has 23 Sea Stallion anti-mine helicopters that could be deployed to clear a channel, but they would need either a base in Knwait or a ship to use as a landing platform.

New Congress in Manila Signals a Shift of Power

By Keith Richburg Washington Post Service

MANILA - A new Philippine Congress officially opens Monday under heavy security precautions, marking the next-to-last step in the country's return to political normalcy and its delicate passage from dictatorial rule to democracy.

All that remains for that passage to be completed is for the country to conduct local elections to replace the thousands of appointed mayors, governors and council members around the country who are holding the jobs on an interim

The period of executive rule followed Mrs. Aquino's abolition of the old legislature in March 1986.

Despite the presence of many legislative veterans in the new Congress, this one will be the youngest in history; more than two-thirds of its members will be newcomers in the political arena.

But in other important ways the Congress seems a throwback to the old politics. Old politics versus the new de-

Mixed Reviews for Plan To Repackage Perpetuals La Chare

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS — Financial institutions sitting on large amounts of perpetual floating-rate notes, which have become illiquid following the collapse of that sector of the Eurobond market late last year, were offered a novel formula last week to transform their holdings into a package of dated

The complex proposal — made by Schroder Wagg, the British merchant bank, in conjunction with Salomon Brothers and Nomura Securities — drew mixed reviews.

Competitors praised the concept, saying it was very clever. But they complained that it was too expensive to have wide appeal - a view that Schroder officials challenged The proposal aims to resolve several problems at the same time. Most important, it would transform securities that currently are more akin to preferred stock into debt securities having a finite life. Perpetuals, as the word indicates. are never repaid. Principal on the new securities would be repaid in 28 years.

In addition, for investors, the transformation would change the status of the perpetuals from primary capital notes to ordinary securities. Perpetuals were issued almost exclusively by banks that wanted to increase their capital but were unwilling or unable

In all but name, the perpetual FRNs were shares: There is no obligation for the issuer to redeem the paper, and the floatingrate interest under certain circumstances may be omitted.

Perpetuals came into vogue in 1984, despite a reminder by the Bank of England that any bank in its jurisdiction holding such paper would have to reduce its own capital by an equal amount. Its aim was to prevent a pyramiding — a nominal increase in the issuing banks' capital without any real increase in the capital available to the banking system to meet unexpected emergencies.

EVERTHELESS, perpetuals were popular. Some $18 billion was sold, largely to banks in Japan, thanks to the fact that the interest — the margin over the London interbank offered rate, or Libor — was higher than on ordinary FRNs that had a fixed redemption date.

That popularity evaporated late last year. The Bank of England and the U.S. Federal Reserve began discussing harmonizing definitions of what constitutes bank capital and how to measure whether it was adequate. Their agreement has not yet been formalized as they seek to establish rules that are acceptable to other national supervisory authorities. .

But the attempt to establish common rules provoked fears that the Bank of Japan would adopt the Bank of England's policy of "shaving" of capital for banks holding other banks' capital notes. That led to heavy selling of perpetuals, a sudden awareness that they are fundamentally different from standard FRNs and a collapse in prices. Most market-makers withdrew from the business, destroying the liquidity of that sector of the market. The Schroder proposal directly addresses the reserve requirements aspect. The securities to be issued in exchange for the perpetual FRNs would not be considered primary capital notes and could carry a capital weighting of between 2 and 10 percent from the Bank of England, instead of 100 percent. A 10 percent weighting is expected. This is significant for Japanese banks that fear similar capital ratio rules will emerge in Tokyo. The Schroder proposal could be especially appealing if they calculate that the cost to sell their perpetuals to the new special-purpose company, Security Investment Holdings, is less than the cost of raising new capital and reserving 100 percent against their existing holdings of perpe-

Schroder is initially seeking up to $1 billion nominal amount of perpetuals in exchange for FRNs and shares issued by SIH.

The perpetuals would be exchanged for 28-year floating-rate notes paying 30 basis points, or 0.30 percent, over Libor.

The new floaters would be rated triple A. They would be secured by zero-coupon bonds of the U.S. Treasury or the World Bank which, after 28 years, would generate the income to redeem

The interest payments on the new FRNs would be financed by the income earned on the perpetuals. In addition, an insurance company, Financial Security Assurance, would provide a guarantee on the payment of interest.

Along with the FRNs issued by SIH, institutions agreeing to the swap would also receive shares in SIH. That company will continue to own the perpetuals after its own 28-year FRN has been redeemed. The continuing income generated by the perpetuals would then be paid to the shareholders as dividends, or the shareholders could decide to sell the company (to an insurance

UAW Faces GM, Ford

Primary Issue For Contract Is Job Security

DETROIT - Job security for nearly 500,000 unionized U.S. car industry workers threatened by foreign competition and cost-cutting will be the main issue when the United Automobile Workers begins national labor bargaining Monday with two major U.S.

General Motors Corp. will begin the contract talks. On Tuesday, Ford Motor Co. is to start a similar seven-week round of bargaining.

Union concern over workers' futures was highlighted last week when GM announced permanent layoffs for 3,000 workers at factories in four states later this year because of slow car sales. That pushed GM's total number of recent layoffs past 40,000.

Overall sales in the U.S. car market are down from last year's The UAW represents 350,000 workers at GM, 110,000 at Ford and about 50,000 laid-off members with re-employment rights. Current contracts expire on

GM and Ford are determined to resist new contract agreements that would raise basic labor costs much beyond the current $25 an hour in wages and benefits, sources close to the talks say. The companies also plan to oppose any move to limit their streamlining operations, especially freedom to buy parts from lowcost outside suppliers in the Unit-ed States or abroad.

Unions Bargain for Guaranteed Employment

By John Holusha New York Times Service

DETROIT - By Christmas, David Sole expects to lose the job he has held for 16 years at General Motors Corp.'s antiquated Fleetwood plant in southwest Detroit. GM is closing the 70-year-old auto plant and laying off 3,000 workers as part of its effort to eliminate older, inefficient fac-

Mr. Sole is bitter at the pros-pect of being tossed aside in the company's drive for higher prof-its. But he and other autoworkers facing the same fate have a new reason for hope.

When their union, the United Automobile Workers, begins hargaining for new labor contracts with GM and Ford Motor Co. this week, it plans to demand that the companies guarantee employ-ment to workers during the life of

Although the union does not seek to preserve each existing job at each plant, it does want the companies to guarantee work, in some form, for its members.

The ultimate goal is lifetime employment security, subject to renewal with every contract. A relatively small number of workers in U.S. industries that range from telecommunications to farm equipment to steel have begun to demand, and even to win, such guarantees. But a victory in the trend-setting automobile industry would undoubtedly turn what has been a minor crusade into a major effort. "Guaranteed employment is a concept whose time has come, Owen F. Bieber, president of the UAW, has declared. "We're going to tell the employers they must guarantee the jobs of their existing work force and maintain a strong manufacturing base here in America." Outside of union circles, there is a heated debate about whether guaranteed employment is good

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -African foreign ministers have called for an international conference to discuss the continent's $200 billion foreign debt, according to sources at their meeting here.

The ministers, preparing for a summit meeting of the Organiza-tion of African Unity in Addis-Ababa this week, on Friday in-structed the OAU secretarial, the UN Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank to set up such a conference as soon as possible, the sources said.

The ministers also said African countries should spend no more than 20 percent of export earnings on debt service. Africa as a whole paid creditors $19 billion in 1986, about 42 percent of the $44 billion

Foreign Investment in China Falls

United Press International

BELITNG - Foreign investment in China dropped by 23.4 percent in the first six months of this year, but an economic official denied that the decline reflected uncertainty about China's political climate.

Foreign companies signed investment contracts valued at $1.09 period last year, said Wang Yongjun, a spokesman for the Foreign Trade Ministry. It was the third successive six-monthly decline.

Mr. Wang denied that the new decline reflected concern about the political climate after the ouster Jan. 16 of the Communist Party chief,

He attributed the decrease in new contracts to China's efforts to

Excluded are perpetuals issued by industrial companies, merchant banks, Australian banks and most Canadian banks. The distinguishing feature of the cligible bank paper is that interest, if ever omitted, continues to accrue.

The discord over whether the swap is good value for money stems from the terms. Paper that is tendered draws only 93 percent of its face value in FRNs issued by Security Investment Holdings. Thus $1 million nominal amount of perpetuals is to be exchanged for $930,000 of SIH paper. The remaining $70,000 is exchanged for 50 nonvoting B shares of STH. In addition, institutions participating in the swap must put up a cash supplement. The amount varies according to which paper is ten-dered and is set daily in relation to the price currently posted in the illiquid secondary market. For the offering period, which ends Friday, the managers set a daily price at which they will accept eligible perpetuals. The cash supplement on the initial price list var-ied from a low of 13.99 percent of the amount tendered for perpetuals issued by Barclays Bank PLC and National Westminster Bank PLC, to 21.76 percent, for those issued by Bank of Ireland.

Amsterdam The Amsterdam Stock Exchange had a mixed week but the general share index gained 0.8 points to close the week at 316.9.

On Monday, international companies were unable to profit from the upward trend on Wall Street or from the gains posted by the dollar, and they retreated further on Tuesday. Royal Dutch was the only exception. Oil prices rose, driving up the price of Royal Dutch stock from 289 guilders to 290.30.

On Wednesday, prices were initially stable, but crumbled later. After an uneventful Thursday, internationals dropped again slightly Fri-day, except Philips, which rose to 55.70, ahead of expected good results.

Hong Kong

The Hong Kong stock market began to con-solidate last week as profit-taking took the steam out of its recent bull run.

The Hang Seng Index, which closed last Monday at a record 3,386.09 points, up 43.96 on the day, ended the week at 3,343.60, up 1.47 from the previous week.

After the previous week's record gains on the London Stock Exchange, shares suffered heavy profit-taking last week, aggravated by concern about the inflationary consequences of a credit boom and by Tokyo's initial weakness.

The Financial Times 30-share index suffered the Financial Times 30-share index suffered its biggest one-day fall on Wednesday, after the release of figures that showed an unexpected U.K. current account deficit in May.

Despite a partial recovery helped by a record rebound in Tokyo, the index closed down 71.9

points on the week, at 1,845.0.
Gilts retreated sharply, as the rise in bank lending figures for time prompted wornes about base rates. Consumer stocks, insurances, chemicals and oil shares were generally easier. Lloyds Bank and Midland Bank both retreated after halfyear figures.

Milan -

Political uncertainty weighed heavily on Milan stocks last week, triggering a decline in local share value that all but wiped out a modest gain the previous week.

The Stock Exchange Index, which gained 1.9

percent the previous week, lost 1.57 percent, to close at 691 points. Trade was also disappointingly low, with 121.6 million shares changing hands, against 119 million the previous w for a value of 639 billion lire, down from 676

Paris

End-of-month liquidation on the Paris Bourse helped local stocks to remain buoyant last week, after an early downward movement.
The CAC index closed Friday at 414 points, just up from 413.8 the previous week.

Tracing was slack Monday and Tuesday as big institutional purchasers remained on the sidelines, noting a lack of interest among foreign investors and developments in the Gulf. Buying returned on Wednesday, and activity picked up sharply Thursday and Friday as dealers settled their monthly accounts.

Companies that were most in demand were tires group Michelin, electronics groups Thomson-CSF and Télémécanique, and the Schneider engineering and electronics group.

Singapore

After five weeks of continuous upsurge, the Singapore stock market was dominated by sellers last week. The Straits Times Industrial Index tumbled 13.12 points to close at 1,361.75.

Investors started liquidating their holdings from the beginning of the week on news that the property-based First Capital Corp. was under investigation by the Commercial Affairs Department. Its shares were suspended for three days but resumed trading on Friday. United Overseas Land and United Industrial Corp. were also suspended for two days at the end of the week. Weekly trading volume dropped 12.2 per-cent to 291.2 million units, with a total value of 782.3 million Singapore dollars.

Tokyo The Tokyo stock exchange rebounded with a record single-session advance last week, but many analysts said the market was still adjust-

The 225-stock Nikkei average scored its largest one-day gain of 906.42 yen Friday, and closed Saturday at 23,964.91 yea, for a fall of 21.48 on the previous week.

The Nikkei had suffered major falls Monday and Wednesday as individual investors dumped their holdings, while institutional buy-ers remained on the sidelines.

Goelet could fit under almost any word in the dictionary beginning with poly.

Polylingual and polydynamic will defimitely do, as will polylogy or much speak-ing. Metaphorically, he is polycarpus (bearing fruit several times) and polych-rest (adapted to several uses). He is certainly polygonal, or many-sided, but emphatically not polygamous, having been married to the same attractive wife for more than 30 years. His conversation changes direction in mid-sentence so that he is in effect enthusiastically talking of at least two subjects at once, which means that in minutes he can range over early Persian miniatures, Chilean rieslings, paleography, hydroponics, and the breeding of clams, cattles, lobster and corn, which he does in France, Britain, Spain and the Middle East, respectively the also produces strawberries from tissue cultures in Nepal and owns vineyards in California. Australia and New Zea-

As he talks, he goes in and out of his library, which has oak panels from the old Goelet steam yacht Nahma, to fetch something else to show the visitor who is already holding a bound manuscript, the Liber Ruralium Commodorum, from the library of Pope Pius VI, the pay of Goelet's friendly black labrador, a set of posters of imaginary and sardonic wine ceremonies of the world that Goelet commissioned from the artist Ronald Searle to use in lieu of advertisements for his wines, and an article by Goelet's oldest son called "Tracking the Flow of Learned Information from Membrane

Receptors to Genome." 'I have very little sense of time," says Goelet, reappearing with a fine flower reproduction by a Dijon printer he is sleeps three hours a night and had just visited a dam on the Tigris or Euphrates and friends in Provence. The next morning at 5 A.M. he would drive to London to drop off a car he had bought in Denmark before going on to Honduras where he is testing a strain of tropical corn for possible use in Angola or Mozambique. The first Monday and Tuesday of every month he is in New York.

For the moment Goelet, 56, has lighted briefly at Sandricourt, a château with 10,000 acres of grounds some 45 minutes north of Paris that his family bought for shooting in 1903 and that was twice occupied by Hermann Göring in World War II (the family chef, who had gone off in a huff to work briefly for the Kaiser, used to wear his German medals while he cooked, intimidating Göring's men into

There used to be vineyards at Sandri-court and one day Goelet will replant. "Until the Hundred Years War this was the biggest wine-producing area in Goelet's mother was a Guestier, one of the leading wine families of Bordeaux, but Goelet was not interested in making Bordeaux wines. "Bordeaux is too selfsatisfied and more interested in real estate than wine-making," he says. Some years ago he visited a California cousin. We opened a bottle which had an enormous mushroom coming out of it and no label. It turned out it was a California wine. It was delicious. I said to myself, why waste my time being the last kid on the block in Bordeaux. Lets make a good wine in California."

In 1972 he started his Clos du Val Wine Co. Ltd. in Napa Valley, having hired Bernard Portet, the very young son of the technical director of Château Lafite, as his aide. In 1986, at a New York blind tasting organized by Steven Spurrier, the Clos du Val '72 beat a Montrose, a Léoville-Las-Cases and a Mouton Rothschild. The Bordelais were not amused.

"The tasting did not cause us any great friendships," Goelet says evenly. He is for blind tastings - "they take the stuffing out of a lot of people who are pompous" — but says they have their limits. He once correctly identified a wine he had never tasted, simply by educated guesswork, while another time, because he was in a bad mood, he missed the wine grown next to his Taltarni vineyards in Australia.

Taltarni, which Ronald Searle calls Kangaronge, is steadily improving, Goelet says. A Bordeaux cousin even presented a bottle to the owner of Petrus -- to what effect Goelet does not know. "The first Taltarnis were too strong - you could almost walk on the waters with them," he says. Goelet's older brother, Robert, is an ornithologist, expert on bird fleas and head of New York's Museum of Natural History. Another brother, Frank, is interested in early American music and has his own record company. The three brothers tend to keep quiet about their philanthropies and achievements. "None of us asks what the others do," John says. He thinks his success as an untrained winegrower and seedsman is the result of applied enthusiasm: "If you want to do something and you decide in your own mind what you want, specifically if you don't know much about it, it makes it much easier.

think the closest I came to becoming an expert is when I was interested in paleography at Harvard. I was very interested in early texts and I was doing it myself because there is no one else to tell you what is going on in front of you. the hand. When Goelet went into the seed business, for example, he decided that rather than sell corn to the American midwest he would aim for the Middle East where they need it more and where he feels quite at home, having studied Arabic at the school of Oriental languages in Paris. He helped a farmhand from Sandricourt do plant research at the University of Cairo and, against all advice, set up tissue culture laboratories in Nepal with Nepalese workers.

"When you talk to people, world bodies, they will tell you oh no, you can't put a highly sophisticated thing into a primi-tive world, which is nonsense.
